Opera singer Jack Reeves has responded to suggestions he is to blame for the attack on a transgender woman in Melbourne. Benjamin Mitchell, 34, was allegedly punched in the face and head at a performance of an English Opera House production of Handel's Alcina at the Opera House on Saturday night. The accused has appeared in court on Tuesday, charged with one count of assault occasioning bodily harm. News footage from the day of the alleged attack showed Mr Mitchell, who is still in hospital, with a large black eye. Olympic cyclist Melissa Breen and journalist Kelsey McNellis have been named by some social media users as the possible perpetrators. But Mr Reeves has denied suggestions he or anyone else was responsible for the attack. "No one, not one person," he said, in response to a Twitter user who suggested he could have kicked the victim in the head. "I do not know anything about the attack. I would never even think such a thing," Mr Reeves said. Jack Reeves is a professional opera singer, most known for his performances in the opera Carmen. He said he was "taken aback" by the accusation. "I was not at the
